All about this bottle

The Suscol Vineyard is the mecca of vineyards since it can be grown without using any supplemental irrigation or plowing the soil. Both use water, but the no-till method does not release carbon dioxide into the atmosphere during fermentation, and vignerons argue continuously over which is best for California's environment. This vineyard is a little-known gem in the middle of Napa Valley that has been farmed organically for almost a decade. This wine went through a malolactic fermentation and 18 months of aging in neutral wood barrels. This is the first Chardonnay Keep Wines ever produced, and it comes from a very unusual Vineyard that was cultivated entirely by hand by Jack. They picked everything by hand, too.
